

Dear Sir or Madam,

I recently heard that your company plans to air a piece called "Stolen Honor" that criticizes presidential candidate John Kerry's service in the armed forces.

This would be a very serious mistake for Sinclair Broadcasting. Not only would it be unethical to air a partisan smear campaign as a "documentary" right before an election, but doing so would undermine the credibility of the individual stations that so many citizens rely on for objective reporting.

I encourage you to stop "Stolen Honor" from being aired as a piece of journalism. If your company should decide it would be good for ratings to show this sort of one-sided programming, please consider also showing something from the other side.

Perhaps "Going Upriver" or "Fahrenheit 911".

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,

Lucia MacMillan
